"My interest in architecture began when I first visited Rome and was overawed by the accomplishments of legendary architects many of whom were multi-disciplinary true renaissance men. Not only could they design buildings, they were also artists, sculptors, builders and inventors and they could do all these things really well. I was impressed that their work has endured long enough for me and later generations to appreciate their art. What could possibly be a better calling in life? This was and continues to be my life calling. I can't imagine any other profession where it's possible transfer an image in the mind to a solid structure you can touch and walk through. The feeling of accomplishment is indescribable and addictive. Architecture is not easy, but nothing worthwhile in life ever is, but the hard work and long hours are rewarded when a client is pleased with the result. They are rarely overawed like I was in Rome, but enough to keep me coming back." - Tony
